
What Is The Gift Of Exhortation

What Is The Gift Of Exhortation

*Downloaded from db.whlcarchitecture.com
by Autumn & Savage*

UNDERSTANDING THE SPIRITUAL GIFT OF EXHORTATION

In the landscape of spiritual gifts, few are as immediately practical and personally impactful as the gift of exhortation. Often described as the gift of encouragement or counseling, this spiritual ability is not merely about offering kind words. It is a distinct, God-given capacity to come alongside others and motivate them toward spiritual growth, perseverance, and action. To answer the question, what is the gift of exhortation, we must look beyond simple definitions and explore its biblical roots, its practical expressions, and its profound impact on the body of believers. This gift is a powerful tool for building up the church and helping individuals navigate the challenges of life with faith and resilience.

The Biblical Foundation of Exhortation

The term "exhortation" comes from the Greek word paraklesis, which means "to call to one's side," "to encourage," "to comfort," or "to urge." This same root word is used for the Holy Spirit, who is called the Paraclete—the Comforter, Counselor, and Advocate. Understanding this connection is crucial. When someone operates in the gift of exhortation, they are, in a sense, acting as an extension of the Holy Spirit's work, bringing comfort and godly counsel to others. The gift of exhortation is first and foremost listed in Romans 12:8, where the Apostle Paul instructs, "if it is encouraging, let him encourage." This simple yet profound directive places exhortation among the core gifts that every believer should recognize and cultivate.

Throughout the New Testament, we see examples of exhortation in action. Barnabas, whose name literally means "son of encouragement," is a prime biblical example. He was known for his ability to see potential in others, such as the newly converted Saul (Paul), and to come alongside him, encouraging him and vouching for him when others were afraid. The book of Hebrews is essentially a sermon of exhortation, urging believers to "hold fast" and "consider how to stir up one another to love and good works." These biblical examples show that the gift is not about flattery or empty cheerleading. It is about delivering timely, truth-filled words that compel action and deepen faith. When we explore what is the gift of exhortation in a biblical context, it becomes clear that it is a means of grace through which God strengthens His people.

Key Characteristics of the Exhortation

Gift

People who operate in this gift have a unique set of traits that distinguish them from other spiritual gifts, such as teaching or administration. Recognizing these characteristics is the first step in understanding how this gift functions in daily life and ministry.

- Practical Application: Those with the gift of exhortation are naturally drawn to practical application. They are not content with abstract theology alone; they constantly ask, "What does this mean for your life today?" They help others take the truths of Scripture and apply them to their specific circumstances, making faith tangible and actionable.

- Motivational Speech: Their words carry weight. When they speak, they have a natural ability to inspire action. They can see the potential in a stalled project or a discouraged person and call out the courage needed to move forward. Their motivation is not manipulative but comes from a genuine desire to see others succeed in their walk with God.
- Empathy and Compassion: A key component of this gift is a deep well of empathy. Exhorters feel the pain and struggles of others acutely. This is not a detached analysis of a problem; it is a compassionate partnership. They "weep with those who weep" before they "rejoice with those who rejoice," building a bridge of trust that allows their counsel to be received.

- Clarity and Directness: While they are compassionate, exhorters are also known for their clarity. They are not afraid to speak the truth in love, even when it is difficult. They can cut through confusion and identify the core issue that needs to be addressed, offering a clear path forward.
- Focus on Growth: The exhorter is always looking toward the horizon. They are less concerned with past failures and more focused on future potential. They help individuals see that their current struggle is not the end of the story and that God has a plan and a purpose for their lives. This forward-looking perspective is a hallmark of the gift of exhortation.

How the Gift of Exhortation Manifests in the Church

Within the local church, the gift of exhortation plays a vital and often understated role. While the teaching gift provides the framework for doctrine, the exhortation gift breathes life into it, making it personal and applicable.

Understanding what is the gift of exhortation in a church setting involves recognizing its diverse applications.

IN PERSONAL COUNSELING AND DISCIPLESHIP

This is the most natural environment for an exhorter. They thrive in one-on-one or small group settings where they can listen, discern, and speak directly into someone's life. They are often the people others seek out when they are feeling discouraged, stuck in sin, or confused about God's will. The exhorter helps them untangle their thoughts, remember God's promises, and take the next step of obedience.

IN PREACHING AND TEACHING

While not all preachers have the gift of exhortation, those who do bring a unique flavor to the pulpit. Their sermons are heavy on application and motivation. They are less likely to give a dry exposition of history and more likely to end with a powerful call to action. They preach with passion and urgency, urging the congregation to not just hear the Word but to do it. This style of preaching is incredibly effective at moving a church from complacency to active ministry.

IN VISITATION AND PASTORAL CARE

Hospital and home visits are a perfect outlet for this gift. An exhorter can walk into a room filled with anxiety and bring a sense of peace and hope. They know how to comfort the grieving with genuine empathy and how to speak a word of faith to the sick. They do not offer platitudes but instead offer a tangible scriptural truth that anchors the soul in a time of crisis.

IN SMALL GROUP LEADERSHIP

Small group leaders with the gift of exhortation are highly effective. They create an environment where members feel safe to share their struggles. They gently guide discussions toward application and ensure that no one leaves the meeting without a sense of direction. They are masters at following up, checking in on group members during the week to see how they are doing with their "homework" of applying the lesson.

Distinguishing Exhortation from Other Gifts

A common point of confusion is differentiating the gift of exhortation from the gift of teaching. While they often work together, they are distinct. To fully understand what is the gift of exhortation, it is helpful to compare it to its close counterpart.

The teacher's primary goal is to ensure that the truth is understood correctly. They focus on accuracy, context, and doctrine. They want people to know what the Bible says. The exhorter, on the other hand, assumes the truth is known and focuses on getting people to live it out. They are concerned with the bridge between "knowing" and "doing." A teacher might explain the doctrine of perseverance, while the exhorter will stand beside someone who is struggling to persevere and say, "You can do this. God is with you. Let's take the first step together." One provides the map; the other provides the encouragement for the journey.

Developing and Using the Gift of

Exhortation

If you believe you have this gift, or if you simply want to grow in this area, there are practical steps you can take. Spiritual gifts are not meant to lie dormant; they are to be developed for the common good. Learning more about what is the gift of exhortation is just the beginning; the real journey is learning to use it effectively.

1. Immerse Yourself in Scripture:

The primary source of all genuine encouragement is the Word of God. To be an effective exhorter, you must be saturated in Scripture. Your words will have power and authority only when they are rooted in biblical truth.

Memorize key promises and passages about God's faithfulness, strength, and love.

2. Be a Good Listener: You cannot give a relevant word of encouragement if you do not understand the situation. Practice active listening. Do not interrupt. Ask clarifying questions. Seek to understand the heart of the matter before you speak. The most powerful exhortation comes from a place of deep understanding.
3. Lean on the Holy Spirit: The gift of exhortation is a spiritual gift, which means it is energized by the Holy Spirit. Rely on Him for wisdom. Before you speak to someone, pray for the right words. Ask the Spirit to give you insight into their specific need and to guide your words so they bring life and healing.

4. Start Small: You do not need a pulpit to use this gift. Start with a simple note of thanks to a coworker. Send an encouraging text to a friend who is having a hard week. Practice speaking words of affirmation to your family members. The more you exercise the gift in small ways, the more natural and powerful it will become.
5. Be Authentic: People can sense insincerity. Your exhortation must come from a genuine heart of love. Do not use the gift as a tool for manipulation or control. Your goal should always be to build up the other person, not to make yourself feel important.

The Importance of Exhortation in the Modern World

We live in a world that is increasingly characterized by anxiety, division, and discouragement. Social media often presents a curated version of success that makes others feel inadequate. The news cycle is dominated by conflict and fear. In this environment, the gift of exhortation is more critical than ever. It is a powerful antidote to the spirit of despair that plagues so many. When we understand what is the gift of exhortation, we recognize it as a frontline tool for spiritual warfare against negativity and hopelessness.

Exhortation builds resilience. It helps people see beyond their immediate circumstances to the eternal hope that is found in Christ. It strengthens marriages, builds families, and unites churches. A church that is filled with exhorters is a church that is alive, active, and growing. It is a place where people are not afraid to fail because they know they will be picked up, dusted off, and encouraged to try again. It is a community that truly reflects the heart of the Paraclete, the Holy Spirit who is always with us, always for us, and always calling us forward into the fullness of our calling in Christ.

Conclusion

In answering the question, what is the gift of exhortation, we find it is far more than a simple pat on the back. It is a profound spiritual ability to partner with God in the work of strengthening His people. It is the gift of coming alongside, of speaking truth in love, and of motivating others toward godly action. Whether you are a pastor, a small group leader, a parent, or a friend, the principles of exhortation are available to every believer. By learning to listen, empathize, and speak timely words of encouragement rooted in Scripture, you can become a powerful conduit of God's grace, helping others run their race with perseverance and joy. Embrace this gift, cultivate it, and watch as God uses your words to transform lives and build His Kingdom one encouraging word at a time.